

M-11 — Time Management

What is this about?

Protecting the two hours a day where your real work actually gets done.

The idea, in plain terms

Arjun coordinates dispatch in Surat. He arrives at nine and leaves at seven. He is genuinely busy the whole time. The two things his manager actually asked for have not moved in a fortnight. Two protected hours, and a rule for everything that interrupts.

Key things to know

- SAME TIME DAILY — habit beats willpower, every time
- IN THE CALENDAR — as a real booking, not an intention
- NOTIFICATIONS OFF — email, chat and phone, all of them
- ONE TASK ONLY — decided the evening before, not at the start

A simple example

Situation: You are twenty minutes into your protected block on the analysis your manager asked for. A colleague appears at your desk with a question about a delivery.

What to do: Ask whether it is a two-minute or twenty-minute thing.

Remember

- Busy is not productive — Reactive work fills any space you leave and leaves no trace.
- Two hours, defended — Same time daily, in the calendar, notifications off, one task.
- Decide the night before — Choosing inside the block spends its freshest, most protected time on the decision instead of the work.
- Size the interruption — "Two minutes or twenty?" Batch the twenties to one point.
- Trade, defer, redirect — Almost nothing needs a flat no, and a flat no costs the most.

Inducto Learning & Knowledge — quick reference for M-11. Watch the lesson video for the full explanation; this page is a takeaway, not a replacement for it.